CAST OF CHARACTERS :

FATHER: a handsome man in his early fifties

DAUGHTER: no resemblance to her father; in her early twenties

SERVANT: a handsome (black) man in his late twenties; formal and efficient

Today; in New York City.

ACT ONE

An elegant dining room with a long table. From a corner downstage, the FATHER watches, through closed circuit television, the arrival of the DAUGHTER.

SERVANT opens the door, bows: he takes her suitcase and places it in a corner. He helps the DAUGHTER with her coat. Not a word is exchanged between them.

(FATHER looks at her with admiration.)

FATHER (with open arms): My love!

DAUGHTER (after a brief hesitation): Daddy!

(a long embrace; they look at each other with curiosity, studying each other. As if it were the first time they met)

FATHER: Welcome home, honey. (DAUGHTER looks around while the SERVANT adds some final touches to the decorated dining table.)

Everything's the same. Just as it was last year. (pause)

Every detail, just as you left it the last time.

(DAUGHTER looks at the objects with curiosity. She doesn't seem to recognize them.) The same armchair.

You sat here; you were tired. (a silence; he studies her)

The same mirror. You admired yourself in it. And I was behind you, like this ... I remember I said—"We make a great couple. don't we? If we weren't father and daughter ..."

(They stare intensely at each other, studying each other, A long silence.) You remember?

DAUGHTER: I remember.

FATHER: Sit here, sweetheart. Peter will serve us right away. You remember Peter?

(DAUGHTER and SERVANT exchange glances and a faint polite smile.)

DAUGHTER: I remember him.

FATHER: Ever faithful! Without him this anniversary would be incomplete. Impossible.

(SERVANT smiles briefly; goes about his duties.)

FATHER: The ritual homecoming... every year at the same time. Punctual and precise, you cross that threshold as I wait with my heart throbbing. Full of love and anticipation (He embraces her again, hugging her lovingly) Thank you.

(They sit silently at the two extreme ends of the table.

SERVANT brings each one a different aperitif. He knows their taste. Maybe it is true the three know each other.)

FATHER (raising his glass): To your beauty!

DAUGHTER: To... my "birthday"! (They drink, studying each other.)

FATHER: I missed you. Twelve long months. An eternity. What were you doing during that eternity?

DAUGHTER: I traveled.

FATHER: Where?

DAUGHTER (vaguely): California, Florida.

FATHER: Alone?

DAUGHTER: Alone.

(Silence. FATHER stares at her. DAUGHTER avoids his gaze. SERVANT begins serving.)

FATHER (after a silence): Weren't you bored, all alone?

DAUGHTER: No.

FATHER: How did you spend your time?

DAUGHTER: Swimming, walking, reading

FATHER: What did you read?

DAUGHTER: Simone de Beauvoir, Anais Nin, Kate Millett, Germaine Greer.

FATHER: Those women.

DAUGHTER: Those.

FATHER: Did they teach you how to hate men?

DAUGHTER: To understand them.

FATHER: What did you understand?

DAUGHTER: Many things.

FATHER: Tell me. (a silence)

DAUGHTER: Ideally men want to have us there, ready and available, panting with desire, only when they feel like it. (sarcastically)

When the mood strikes them. Once a week.

FATHER: That's not true.

DAUGHTER: Yes, it is.

FATHER: I desired your mother every night.

DAUGHTER (ironic): You "desired."

FATHER: She was the one who didn't want me. (A silence. DAUGHTER smiles faintly, mysteriously.) Did you know?

DAUGHTER: No.

FATHER: Did she ever tell you why?

DAUGHTER: No.

FATHER: Never?

DAUGHTER: Never

FATHER: Swear to it.

DAUGHTER (ready and sincere: raising her right hand): I swear. We never spoke of you. (A silence. They eat, ignoring SERVANT's presence.)

FATHER: Why did you choose to read those books? (a vague ironic gesture from DAUGHTER) ... Do you need to know "more" about men?

DAUGHTER: That too.
 FATHER: What else did you find out?
 DAUGHTER: Men have a basic fear of women.
 FATHER: Not me.
(a silence; they study each other)
 DAUGHTER: That they have more hang-ups than we do.
 FATHER: What kind of hang-ups?
 DAUGHTER: All sorts (the FATHER is waiting with curiosity; she keeps him in suspense) Insecure... Vain... Conceited... Selfish.
 FATHER: Women too. It's the human condition.
 DAUGHTER: They're more unfaithful than women... more—
 FATHER (cutting in): I knew those books would poison you!
 DAUGHTER: Would you prefer me to say they're angels, faithful and dedicated, better than women?
 FATHER: The truth, only the truth.
 DAUGHTER (shrugging): What's the truth?
 FATHER: You're like us. (cautiously, accusatory) Unfaithful and fickle like us. Human... from "homo hominis"; human like us. You shouldn't deny that. (a silence; DAUGHTER seems to ignore him: she nibbles without looking at him.)
 FATHER (suddenly): Who are you living with these days? (a silence) The one you had last year?
 DAUGHTER: No.
 FATHER: Who is it this year?
 DAUGHTER: You don't know him. (a silence)
 FATHER: The one who sends you off to California or Florida—alone? (a brief pause) Why?
 DAUGHTER: Insecure, confused, selfish.
 FATHER: Insecure about what?
 DAUGHTER: He's afraid of a female presence.
 FATHER: Yours?
 DAUGHTER: Mine... Others...
 FATHER: Are there "other women" in his life?
 DAUGHTER: I don't think so.
 FATHER: Were there "others," before you?
 DAUGHTER: Possibly. Attempts. Men always try.
 FATHER: Women too.
 DAUGHTER: Naturally.
 FATHER: "Naturally." Nature can be blamed. It's easier. (FATHER stares at her; DAUGHTER tries to ignore him.)
 DAUGHTER (uneasy): It is easier.
 FATHER: You didn't need those books to find out he's selfish and full of hang-ups.
 DAUGHTER: Those books confirmed my own experiences.
 FATHER: "Experiences." (he studies her in silence) Did you have many... friends when you were alone at those beach resorts?
 DAUGHTER: No.
 FATHER (ironic): How come?
 DAUGHTER: I don't believe in casual friendships—
 FATHER (ironic): "Friendships"...
 DAUGHTER: Love affairs. They give men weapons against women.
 FATHER: What weapons?
 DAUGHTER (staring at him): Good reasons to despise us...
 FATHER: "Good" reasons. (interested in that theory) An interesting thesis. "Don't drink when you wear a Republican button. They might think all Republicans are drunks."

 DAUGHTER: Or whores. (a silence; FATHER looks at her with admiration.)
 FATHER: I'm proud to see that you're a gung-ho feminist. Ardent and dedicated (looks at her with eyes full of love) All right, I believe you.
 DAUGHTER (sarcastic): Thanks!
 FATHER (deliberately, studying her): You have spent a year in white, then.
 DAUGHTER: In white.
 FATHER: Almost pure.
 DAUGHTER: Pure.
 FATHER: Only one man—the one who sends you far away to—
 DAUGHTER: Not even him.
 FATHER: Not even the first time, when you met him?
 DAUGHTER (staring at FATHER and studying him): No.... He was wearing his button and was drunk.
 FATHER: And when he woke up the next morning?
 DAUGHTER: He was surprised to see me in his bed. Amid the wine fumes he couldn't remember asking me to stay. "Forever".
 FATHER: And later, during the year?
 DAUGHTER: I waited with anticipation. Perfumed and romantic. Sentimental and naive. Vibrant and passionate. Vulnerable. The way they want you.
 FATHER: What happened?
 DAUGHTER: Nothing.
(FATHER seems relieved and happy. This is good news for him. He eats with more relish.)
 FATHER (after a silence): Do you think he's gay?
 DAUGHTER: Not actively. (studying him) He's afraid to take the big step. He's afraid of everything.
 FATHER: What about his friends? Does he have any? Did he introduce you to them?
 DAUGHTER: No. He's very jealous. Jealous of everybody. And I mean—everybody.
 FATHER: Women too?
 DAUGHTER: Women too.
 FATHER (thinking it over, with concealed joy): In twelve months, then, not even a caress, a—
 DAUGHTER (confirming the point): Not once.
 FATHER (happy): My baby! Pure and innocent. As immaculate as last year, when I kissed your forehead, after our tender, delightful celebration.
 DAUGHTER: Just the same, Daddy. (studies him; stares at him) Just as you've always wanted me to be. Pure and untouched.
 FATHER: I'm glad, I can't tell you why but I'm glad. I'm told all fathers react the same way. "Naturally." It's human nature.
 DAUGHTER: Men.
 FATHER (ignoring her): Anyhow, before ...
 DAUGHTER: Before what?
 FATHER: Do you remember what you told me last year?
 DAUGHTER: No.
 FATHER: Your trip to Europe. The Italian lover.
 DAUGHTER (vague): The past is past.
 FATHER: The French one.
